

Everybody knows that in the movie, "Honey I Shrunk the Kids" the kids were shrunk by a shrink ray, but what we don't all know is that part of the beam was reflected off of a mirror in the background, and reflected into space. The beam bounced off the satellites surrounding Earth for a few years, then it came back. That's when it hit me, Will Warnell.

I was polishing my snowglobe collection, being super careful not to drop anything into my seven foot tall, scale replica of Hogwarts snow globe that I had just drained the water from. I have to refill it about once every year. I had just opened the top, and was reaching in to scrub the insides when the beam hit me right in the head.

I began to shrink, I held onto the opening at the top of the snow globe for dear life. I pulled out my pocket rope, which I always carry on me incase of emergency. I tied a one-handed lasso, a knot that I invented myself, and lassoed the top of Hogwarts castle. I was planning to slowly climb down the rope, but instead my hand slipped, and I Spiderman swung down to Hagrid's hut.

I realized that I was in a Harry Potter geek's paradise, so I began to go sightseeing. The first thing I wanted to do was to see if the buildings were actually hollow so that I could see all the sights Hogwarts had to offer. I decided to go into the nearest building, the hut. As I opened the door to the hut, i breathed a sigh of relief, the buildings were hollow. I walked around the structure, looking at all the magical items in there, such as Hagrid's umbrella, and Norbert's egg.

That's when it hit me, why not bring this stuff with me, so that when I get big again (and I hoped I would) I could sell it on Ebay, and make a fortune. The first thing I grabbed was the dragon egg, the only problem with that is that it was actually a portkey. For those who don't know what a portkey is, it's basically a magical teleporter, shaped like an everyday object. I held on for dear life to that port key, until something came into view, Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. As soon as I saw it, I let go of the port key, seeing as this was my first time using a portkey, I flopped on my face.

As I stood up to face the castle, I was shot in the back with a stunning spell. I wasn't used to the sensation, so I blacked out. When I woke up in the infirmary, I was overjoyed at what I saw, It was actually the hogwarts infirmary. So I've been living at hogwarts ever since. Professor Slugworth has been trying to create a potion to turn me into a wizard, Professor McGonagall tried to transfigure me into a wizard, and all the other professors have been working themselves silly trying to get their new favorite student some magical powers. Also, the new headmaster has been forcing them to. It totally has nothing to do with some blackmailing them into telling the ministry about the "unregistered portkey."

Eventually I do manage to get magic powers, thanks to powdered root of asphodel, and an infusion of wormwood.